

INVESTORS EDGE

TJ Maxx delivers bargains and growth

"I buy expensive suits. They just look cheap on me." — Warren Buffet

Jim Burns CFA Contributing writer

Back in February of this year, I recommended Ollie's Bargain Outlets, a discount retail chain with locations in DeWitt and Cicero. Since then, Ollie's is up a whopping 65 percent while the S&P 500 index is roughly flat.

Merry Christmas, my readers!

Now, given the hustle and bustle of the holiday season, I thought I would write to you about another discount retailer that I am willing to bet most of our readers shop at: TJ Maxx.

In fact, every year around the 20th of December, my wife asks me if my Christmas shopping is done and if I got something nice for my in-laws. My answer, of course, is no.

But this reminder usually sends me straight to the Fayetteville TJ Maxx. There, I can always find quality gifts at cheap prices, and everyone is reminded what a great son-in-law I am.

As we are all aware, traditional retailers have been shredded in the age of Amazon, Alibaba, and Overstock.com. ShoppingTown mall is now a ghost town, JC Penney continues to rapidly close stores, and Sears, once the world's largest retailer, is now in bankruptcy.

But discount retail chains, such as Ollie's and TJ Maxx, have surged, growing in popularity and effectively competing with online shopping.

Headquartered in Framingham, Massachusetts, TJX Companies (ticker symbol: TJX) is a multinational off-price department store company, sporting roughly 4,000 stores in half a dozen countries. With several stores in the Syracuse area, you likely know this company by other names including Marshalls, HomeGoods, and Sierra Trading Post.

TJX has a long history of delivering strong returns to its shareholders.

Currently selling at $45 per share after recently completing a 2-for-1 stock split, TJX has a long history of delivering strong returns to its shareholders. Despite now being roughly 18 percent off its all-time high, TJX is up 20 percent year-to-date with the S&P 500 Index being slightly up at the time of this writing.

The allure of TJX should be no secret to most readers. The company sells quality, name-brand merchandise at reduced prices of 20 to 60 percent. TJX buys excess inventory from manufacturers and ailing “Amazonized” department stores at rock-bottom prices, and passes on the savings to the consumer.

SEE EDGE, D5

In fact, TJX now buys its merchandise from more than 20,000 vendors in more than 100 countries. This powerful business model allows the company to sell many of its products at prices that are, in fact, lower than Amazon’s.

At TJ Maxx, you can find brands such as Polo, Tommy Hilfiger, Calvin Klein, Michael Kors, and more. In addition to apparel, TJ Maxx holds a wide variety of name-brand furniture, jewelry, shoes, housewares, and cosmetics.

This business model has been a home run with consumers, holding steady during the Great Recession of 2008-2009 and thriving during the recovery. In fact, TJX has delivered more than 10 straight years of earnings growth including double digit growth the last five years.

Last year the company did more than $35 billion in sales, nearly $10 billion more than Macy’s and the most of any discount retail chain.

While traditional department stores have closed many of their brick and mortar stores, consolidated inventory, and tried to compete with Amazon online, TJX has done the opposite. For the past five years, the company has opened on average 200 new stores! They have also raised their long-run store target to more than 6,000 locations, meaning significant additional expansion is likely.

As I have stated before, I like to invest in growing companies, with sustainable business models, that sell products I can use. For many of us, TJ Maxx and Marshalls fit the bill perfectly.

So while we will assuredly roam its aisles this holiday season, it might be a good idea to stuff your stocking with some TJX stock. Fresh off a 2-for-1 stock split, and more than 15 percent off its all-time high, local investors should buy in on this long-term bargain.

Happy Holidays!

Jim Burns, a chartered financial analyst, is president of J.W. Burns & Co. The opinions expressed here are his and do not necessarily reflect those of The Post-Standard. Readers should do research before deciding on an investment. Contact him at jburns@jwburns.com.

J.W. BURNS & COMPANY, INC.
INVESTMENT COUNSEL

Important Disclosure Information

Please remember that past performance may not be indicative of future results. Different types of investments involve varying degrees of risk, and there can be no assurance that the future performance of any specific investment, investment strategy, or product (including the investments and/or investment strategies recommended or undertaken by J.W. Burns & Company, Inc.), or any non-investment related content, made reference to directly or indirectly in this newsletter will be profitable, equal any corresponding indicated historical performance level(s), be suitable for your portfolio or individual situation, or prove successful. Due to various factors, including changing market conditions and/or applicable laws, the content may no longer be reflective of current opinions or positions. Moreover, you should not assume that any discussion or information contained in this newsletter serves as the receipt of, or as a substitute for, personalized investment advice from J.W. Burns & Company, Inc.. Please remember to contact J.W. Burns & Company, Inc., in writing, if there are any changes in your personal/financial situation or investment objectives for the purpose of reviewing/evaluating/revising our previous recommendations and/or services. J.W. Burns & Company, Inc. is neither a law firm nor a certified public accounting firm and no portion of the newsletter content should be construed as legal or accounting advice. A copy of the J.W. Burns & Company, Inc.’s current written disclosure statement discussing our advisory services and fees continues to remain available upon request.